

Mt. McKinley in Denali National Park

The best lodges in Alaska have our name on them

Let the majesty of Denali take your breath away

The natives named it Denali, "The Great One." And living up to its name, there's truly no place else like it on earth. Alaska's Denali National Park spans six million acres of forests, tundra, glaciers and mountains — more land than the state of Massachusetts. Yet only 90 miles of main road traverses the park, leaving the moose, caribou, sheep and bears free to roam a wondrous expanse untouched by man.

And there, towering above it all, is majestic Mt. McKinley, the highest point in all of North America. At 20,320 feet, its summit beckons more than 1,000 climbers each year who brave the elements for the chance to scale its imposing face. Princess guests also enjoy equally dazzling views of this magnificent peak — from the comfort of our luxurious Mt. McKinley Princess Wilderness Lodge.® It's the ultimate Alaska escape.
